Every year, the World Peace Forum analyzes the social, political and cultural dynamics of all nations, and assigns a Worldwide Peace Prize, to persons, groups or organizations worldwide for tangible actions towards Peace, with the patronage of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and the Schengen Peace Foundation: the 'Luxembourg Peace Prize'. In 2017, the 'Outstanding Peace Activists' Prize was awarded to the Foundation for Culture Arts and Science 'the Club of Budapest' [COB], to its initiator Professor Ervin Laszlo and to the members of the Club, for their work of building bridges among cultures, and for their promotion of a 'Planetary Consciousness' on the theme of 'Unity in Diversity', and of super-coherence between human beings.

Among the members of the COB to receive the Prize is the Cognitive Scientist Anna Bacchia, Creative Member of the COB and founder of the national chapter COB Switzerland, who since years is developing a research, educational programs and a worldwide intercultural Project on the theme "many native languages, one only human language, one only humanity".

During the Awards Ceremony at the European Parliament Building in Luxembourg, the initiator of the COB, the world renowned scientist and systems philosopher Ervin Laszlo, presented [via a Skype transmission] the foundations of the COB and its mission, based on supercoherence as seen by the most advanced contemporary scientific paradigms.

The Science Director Maria Sagi put into evidence the dedication given to the COB's programs which are being actualized around the globe.

The COB's CCO Anne-Marie Voorhoeve focused on the mission of the COB as "a catalyst for the transformation to a sustainable world, through: promoting the emergence of planetary consciousness, interconnecting generations and cultures, integrating spirituality science and arts, and fostering learning communities worldwide." And she underlined the concrete Projects which are currently being actualized in the 24 national chapters of the COB International, towards the establishment of a global supercoherent network.

The Creative Member Anna Bacchia presented the COB as outstanding creative territory for intercultural projects, and her personal perspective of a humanistic evolution founded on an unexplored intuitive syntony and empathy which generate excellence of competences, responses, comprehension, of a natural coherence and of a stress-free respons-ability, within an expanded vital breathing.
